Trump denies new rape accusation: 'She's not my type'

"I'm glad I'm not his type," writer E. Jean Carroll said after the president denied sexually assaulting her.

President Donald Trump denied a recent claim that he raped writer E. Jean Carroll 23 years ago, insisting that she's not his "type."

Carroll is the 22nd woman to publicly accuse the president of sexual assault. Her allegations came to light Friday in New York Magazine, in an excerpt from a forthcoming book. Since then, there has been criticism over the lack of public conversation around the rape claim, with some victim advocates pointing to the normalization of sexual misconduct.

Carroll, 75, said in the mid-1990s that Trump threw her up against a wall at a dressing room at Bergdorf Goodman in Manhattan so violently that "I hit my head really hard: boom." Carroll said she tried to fight back, but was overpowered.

"I'll say it with great respect," Trump said in an interview with The Hill, that Carroll was "totally lying," and emphatically insisted he didn't know anything about her. "Number 1, she's not my type. Number 2, it never happened. It never happened, OK?"

Trump used a similar defense when smacking down another sexual misconduct claim in 2016. After Jessica Leeds said Trump groped her on a plane in the 1980s, Trump told crowds at a campaign rally that Leeds "would not be my first choice."

He also denied the claims on Saturday, telling media, "People have to be careful, because they're playing with very dangerous territory."

In response to Trump's comments, Carroll told Anderson Cooper in an interview Monday night: "I love that. I am so glad I'm not his type. I'm so glad." Carroll also said on CNN that the president "just went at it" during the alleged attack, pulling down her tights. "It was a fight," she said. Carroll said she told two friends, but didn't report the incident for fear of retribution.

When discussing Trump's denial of myriad sexual assault allegations, Carroll said, "He denies, he turns it around, he threatens and he attacks."

Talk show host Stephen Colbert took aim at the new rape allegation, and the lack of publicity, during his show's opening monologue Monday night, calling the claims "specific," "credible" and "terrible."

The Rape, Abuse & Incest National Network, also known as RAINN, told Metro that since Carroll's account was published, the National Sexual Assault Hotline has seen a 53 percent increase in calls compared to the prior week.

The influx is not uncommon for the organization. Its president, Scott Berkowitz, said, "We generally do see a spike when some story about sexual assault is in the news, but this is higher than we normally see. The biggest we ever saw was the day after the Kavanaugh hearing (338 percent). It was not as big as that, but bigger than around the Cosby verdict (6 percent) and around the Access Hollywood tape (15 percent)."

Bill Cosby appeals 2018 conviction for sex attack

2 Bill Cosby's lawyers on Tuesday appealed his Pennsylvania conviction for drugging and sexually attacking former Temple University administrator Andrea Constand at his home near Philadelphia 15 years ago. Attorneys for the once-beloved American actor and comedian, star of "The Cosby Show," submitted a written appeal of the 2018 guilty verdict to the Pennsylvania Superior Court, calling for either a new trial or dismissal of the conviction altogether. The 348-page document said Cosby, 81, was wrongly convicted on the basis of "flawed, erroneous, and prejudicial rulings" by the trial judge, including allowing testimony from several accusers other than the woman he was charged with assaulting in the case. Cosby was convicted in April 2018 of attacking his onetime friend, Constand, a former women's basketball coach, in his suburban Philadelphia home. REUTERS

San Fran to become first US city to ban e-cig sales

3 San Francisco will become the first major city in the United States to ban the sale of e-cigarettes as officials look to control the rapid uptick in teenage use of nicotine devices made by companies such as Juul Labs Inc. The San Francisco Board of Supervisors approved the ordinance on Tuesday, banning the sale and distribution of e-cigarettes until they have approval from the U.S. Food and Drug Administration. States and cities across the U.S. have already moved to ban flavored e-cigarettes and raise the legal age for purchasing tobacco products to 21, but San Francisco's new approach is the most far-reaching yet. San Francisco City Attorney Dennis Herrera, who spearheaded the ordinance earlier this year, praised the move and said it was necessary because of what he called an "abdication of responsibility" by the FDA in regulating e-cigarettes. Longtime Trump aide Grisham next press secretary

4 Stephanie Grisham, communications director for first lady Melania Trump and a longtime aide to President Donald Trump, will succeed Sarah Sanders as White House press secretary, Mrs. Trump announced on Tuesday. Melania Trump announced the development in a tweet to conclude the president's search for a press secretary after Sanders decided to resign and go back home to Arkansas earlier this month. Grisham, 42, a fixture in the Arizona Republican Party, was one of Trump's first hires for his presidential campaign — as a press aide in 2015. She served as a deputy press secretary when he took office in January 2017 and eventually moved over to the first lady's operation, and she has been fiercely loyal to the Trumps. Grisham was viewed internally as the candidate with the best rapport with Trump, a key requirement. REUTERS

2 killed in 5 Boston shootings since Sunday

One man was killed in a shootout with Boston police Monday.

NATE HOMAN
letters@metro.us

A 19-year-old man was killed in a shootout with police in Dorchester on Monday afternoon, capping off a spate of gun violence that saw five shootings across Boston.

Officers in the bicycle unit were responding to a shooting between two men on Geneva Street when they spotted one of the suspects running with a gun in his hand, and chased him down Penhallow Street according, to CBS Boston. At this point, BPD officials said a gunfight broke out, and the man was pronounced dead at the scene.

"According to several witnesses, the suspect then pointed the firearm at the officers, and discharged the firearm at the Boston police officers," BPD Commissioner William Gross told CBS Boston. "These officers were in uniform with their badge clearly displayed."

This shooting was one of several recent reports of gun violence.

At about 3 p.m. Sunday, officers responded to a report of a shooting near 3 Duke Street in Mattapan. There they found a man suffering from gunshot wounds who was transported to a local hospital, and later died.

Later that night, at 9:30 p.m., a man was shot in the stomach on Maple Street in Roxbury.

Shortly after, MBTA Transit Police officers received a radio call to respond to the MBTA's Aquarium Station for a report of shots fired. Investigators said an argument started onboard an inbound Blue Line train involving several young men. The disturbance continued onto the platform at Aquarium Station, and at least two shots were fired. No one was reported injured.

"We are extremely grateful no one was injured during [Sunday's] incident and all available resources will be deployed to identify, locate and apprehend the person/s responsible for such reckless and criminal conduct," T Police Superintendent Richard Sullivan said in a statement.

Later, two people were shot at 9:51 p.m. at 197 Columbia Road in Dorchester. Both victims brought themselves to a hospital with non-life-threatening injuries. Police said one person suffered life-threatening injuries after being shot at 83 Fayston St. at 10:43 p.m.

"Any act of violence in our city is tragic and traumatizing," Mayor Marty Walsh tweeted. "We will continue to focus on preventing crime by creating more opportunities for our young people, and a path away from violence. We will not rest until all residents feel safe and supported in their neighborhood each and every day."

> "Any act of violence in our city is tragic and traumatizing."
> Mayor Marty Walsh

According to BPD data, six more people have been shot this year than last year. The five-year average of shooting victims is 86.

Director of Violence Boston Inc. Monica Cannon-Grant described the violence as "absolutely disheartening," and said, "The city of Boston has no community lead violence prevention plan and there isn't a line item in the budget ... specifically to combat violence prevention. Until we are proactive and not reactive we will be holding hearings every summer and suffering the same violence."

Trump threatens 'obliteration,' Iran calls White House 'mentally retarded'

President Donald Trump threatened on Tuesday to obliterate parts of Iran if it attacked "anything American," in a new war of words with Iran, which condemned the latest U.S. sanctions on Tehran and called White House actions "mentally retarded."

Trump on Monday signed an executive order imposing largely symbolic economic sanctions against Iranian Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei and other senior figures, with punitive measures against Foreign Minister Mohammad Javad Zarif expected later this week.

Iran shot down a U.S. drone last week and Trump said he had called off a retaliatory airstrike with minutes to spare, saying too many people would have been killed. It would have been the first time the United States had bombed the Islamic Republic in four decades of mutual hostility.

In rhetoric similar to the kind of harsh words he used to aim at North Korea, Trump tweeted: "Any attack by Iran on anything American will be met with great and overwhelming force. In some areas, overwhelming will mean obliteration."

In a televised address on Tuesday, Iranian President Hassan Rouhani said the new sanctions against Khamenei would have no practical impact because the top cleric had no assets abroad.

Rouhani, a pragmatist who won two elections on promises to open Iran up to the world, said the White House's actions were "mentally retarded" — an insult that other Iranian officials have used in the past about Trump, but a departure from Rouhani's own comparatively measured tone over the years.

"Tehran's strategic patience does not mean we have fear," said Rouhani, who with his cabinet runs Iran's day-to-day affairs while Khamenei, in power since 1989, is the country's ultimate authority.

ESCALATING U.S. SANCTIONS

The United States has imposed crippling financial sanctions against Iran since last year when Trump withdrew from a 2015 deal between Tehran and world powers under which Iran curbed its nuclear program.

Tension has escalated sharply since last month, when the Trump administration tightened its sanctions noose, ordering all countries to halt purchases of Iranian oil.

That has effectively starved the Iranian economy of the main source of revenue Tehran uses to import food for its 81 million people, and left the pragmatic wing of Iran's leadership, led by Rouhani, with no benefits to show for its nuclear agreement.

Trump says the accord reached under his predecessor Barack Obama was a failure because its terms were not permanent and did not cover security issues beyond the nuclear program, such as missiles and role in various Middle East conflicts. REUTERS

It all starts with the truth

The Kunhardt's directed HBO's new jaw-dropping documentary, "True Justice: Bryan Stevenson's Fight For Equality"

MOLLY GIVEN
Molly.Given@metro.us

The Kunhardts with Bryan Stevenson.

Emmy Award-winning documentary filmmakers Peter, George and Teddy Kunhardt are known for taking sensitive subject matter to the next level by bringing the truth to light.

The truth is a tricky subject often hard to hear, but the Kunhardts are warriors of educating and informing the world on earnest messages that need to be heard. That rings eerily true with their latest documentary, "True Justice: Bryan Stevenson's Fight For Equality" (premiering June 26). The new HBO film highlights Stevenson's endless fight to advocate for the poor, the incarcerated and the condemned through an unjust and morally corrupt justice system. The Kunhardts sat down with Metro to discuss their latest film, delve into why Stevenson's story is so compelling and highlight why we all must learn the truth about our country's history before it repeats itself.

When did you first hear about Bryan Stevenson and what motivated you to make this documentary centered around his work?

GK: The three us watched Bryan's Ted Talk back in 2012, and once we watched that and saw his charisma and his energy and his message— we knew that he would be an amazing person to do a film on and spend a couple of years working with. It took a long time to get him to approve the project and to get him to come with us. In 2016, our brother who is the Executive Director of the Gordon Parks Foundation honored Bryan with a prestigious award there, and that's where we got to meet him for the first time. From then on, we just kept asking him to do a project, and he saw our "King in the Wilderness" film and loved it— so everything just fell into place.

TK: I would add that when we heard him speak for the first time in real life— there's a true magic to him and we all simultaneously turned to each other and we just said we need to get this guy to tell his story. We've become very careful about who we do a film on, we know we have to live with these subjects for a year and a half. So we're very careful that we are picking someone we respect and admire and who can fall under the banner of moral leadership.

PK: Moral leadership is kind of a trait that makes for good storytelling and [resonates with] audiences. That was certainly a criterion that Bryan met.

While working on the film and knowing the unjust nature of our justice system, was there anything that truly shocked you?

TK: You know we were very privileged to have had an amazing education growing up– but never during the course of my history classes did I learn about convict leasing. Bryan's narrative of the North won the Civil War, but the South won the narrative meaning slavery didn't end, it just evolved. That to me was jaw-dropping that we weren't taught that in school.

PK: Bryan is well known for his work with getting people off death row who are wrongly convicted or badly convicted. That's a good portion of the film, but the other portion of the film is his insight into the country's history and how slavery didn't just end, it evolved and transformed into other forms. It exists today in the racial undertones. Bryan is also working on trying to realize why we still are where we are in the race situation. On the other end, if you don't have the resources to defend yourself, the system is loaded against you.

GK: One of the lines Bryan says is it's easier to be rich and guilty than poor and innocent. That's as evident as possible with what Bryan talks about and with what we see in the film.

George, Peter and Teddy Kunhardt

What steps do you think need to be taken to help change the system?

PK: I think education is the first step. Messages like Bryan Stevenson's message and truth-telling about what really is going on in this country just hasn't taken place yet. Truth-telling is something the next generations have got to not only hear about, but grow up believing it. It all begins with the truth, this is all just the very beginning.

TK: And being willing to go and listen to the truth. Bryan talks a bit about the Holocaust and how it's a part of Germany's history, you can't go ten feet without seeing a marker– it's part of their culture.

What do you hope audiences will take away from "True Justice: Bryan Stevenson's Fight For Equality"

GK: I hope people watch the film, have conversations with their friends and family, and hopefully make the trek down to Alabama to see the museum and the lynching memorial because there is a whole different life about it when you're physically there.

TK: This is just getting the conversation started. Ava [Duvernay] did it with the "13th" and Kenny Turan just did an LA Times review and he said that this is the next chapter of that film. We have to keep the conversation alive and teach the next generation this brutal history so it doesn't repeat itself and so we can start to repair the damage that was done.

3 MENSWEAR PROPOSALS THAT CHALLENGE BOREDOM

LUZ LANCHEROS | METRO WORLD NEWS
PHOTOS: CONTRIBUTED

"The Great Male Renunciation" — a historical phenomenon at the end of the 18th century in which men stopped using brilliant or refined forms in their dress, which were left to women's clothing — has been forgotten on the catwalk.

The menswear fashion weeks have officially started. The segment exclusively dedicated to men's fashion, however, now also includes feminine looks. This year's shows are set to become a guideline to implement new trends within the industry that confirm multiplicity of meanings is important. Metro highlights collections that have left classic proposals behind.

OFF-WHITE

The collaboration of Virgil Abloh with Futura (Lenny McGurr) sees the influence of the art of graffiti on this collection that honors the time of Futura alongside artists like Jean-Michel Basquiat. Graffiti, tie-dye, floral prints, mesh and denim can be seen with sportswear being used as a red line together with maxi dresses and oversized garments.

WALTER VAN BEIRENDONCK

The Belgian designer who is part of the Antwerp Six continues to surprise with an explosion of colors. But this time, the 62-year-old uses waterproof materials gathered with exaggeration on the shoulders, as well as pieces that play with the conventional silhouette. His sample of sportswear, called "Alien Vintage," features his imagination of creatures from other planets along with their appearances (four arms, unexplored pants forms, etc.).

UNDERCOVER

For those who are really fed up with sportswear and hoodies than cost $500 and up, this proposal rescues it thanks to classic looks. Undercover designer Jun Takahashi was sick of the same thing! Ironically, the brand stands out when athleisure is at its peak by bringing traditional pieces in oversized silhouettes, deconstructed and intervened with graphic work (reproductions of Cindy Sherman), but without losing the color palette. Takahashi prefers this to the simplicity of the ironic hoodie that has reigned for several seasons.

Free-agency madness

The craziness of NBA free agency is just four days away.

MATT BURKE
matthew.burke@metro.us

The glorious chaos of NBA free agency is just four days away and this year there is more mystery than ever for where some of the biggest stars in pro basketball will wind up.

Here we will handicap the teams with the most intriguing situations, predicting where the likes of Kevin Durant, Kyrie Irving, Jimmy Butler, Kemba Walker and many other big names will land.

Celtics

The New York Times' Marc Stein reported Tuesday that the Celtics are "a stealth suitor" for Kemba Walker to essentially replace Kyrie Irving in free agency.

This would be an absolute coup for Danny Ainge.

The issue here is that Walker is one loyal cat, and has already stated that he would be willing to take less money to stay in Charlotte to help build a winner there.

Not many people would have the cojones to tell [Hornets owner] Michael Jordan that they're turning their back on him. I mean, who wants to let Michael F'n Jordan down?!

So Ainge would have to do one hell of a pitch job.

It's much more likely that the Celtics look to sign a couple of middle-tier free agents with their newfound money. There have been rumblings that the Celtics are looking at going after Bucks restricted free agent Malcolm Brogdon (which would both injure the rival Bucks and help Boston), and they could also target a player like Kevon Looney or Julius Randle.

Another wild card here is free agent DeMarcus Cousins. Cousins' value is way down after an injury-plagued season with the Warriors.

Cousins was reportedly ready to sign with the Celtics in free agency last offseason before the Warriors came charging in, and Boogie could do two things by heading to Boston this offseason. He could potentially get more money with the Celtics than he would elsewhere (Ainge may be willing to overspend) to recover some of the money lost last year, and he would again be in the mix for a championship.

Keep in mind that Cousins and former Celtics star Isaiah Thomas are close, having played in Sacramento together. A reunion between Boston and "I.T." could come to fruition this summer as well.

Projection: Celtics sign Malcolm Brogdon, Kevon Looney.

Knicks

The two franchises that were hurt most by the Kevin Durant injury in the Finals were obviously the Warriors and Knicks. Golden State, because it lost arguably the best player in the world in a do-or-die Game 5. New York, because the gruesome injury severely clouded the likelihood of Durant heading to Manhattan.

Durant-to-the-Knicks was being spoken of as a "done deal" by most of the top NBA media types, but now that Durant will likely miss the entire 2019-20 season, there is not much of a sense of urgency for him to change locales.

There has been growing speculation in recent days that Durant could sign a five-year max contract with the Warriors, with an agreement that Golden State would then turn around and trade him to the Knicks. That way, Durant maximizes the amount of money he can make, and the Warriors get something in return.

The Knicks front office likely isn't too keen on that idea considering that they'd have to part with key assets, but would ultimately do it if that's what Durant wants (no doubt, this is a players' league now).

One way or another, I gotta believe that Durant lands in New York this summer. He knows full well that the one thing that could separate him from the pack of all-time NBA greats is bringing a title to the long-suffering Knicks. It would make him an immortal not just in New York, but also put him right up there will Jordan and LeBron James in the discussion of greatest of all time.

As for the second (and potentially third) star to place next to Durant in New York, Knicks fans will likely have to wait. And that might not be the worst thing.

Durant can be in the fold of decision-making for a full year and next summer the Knicks can cash in all of their assets and money in the trade and free-agent markets.

Some of the current top free agents could again be available, too (Kyrie?), as signing one-year deals has become en vogue in the NBA.

Projection: Knicks sign Kevin Durant.

Nets

The Nets must essentially choose between Kyrie Irving and D'Angelo Russell and it looks as though they'll go the Kyrie route as long as they're assured that someone else is coming with him.

Kyrie and fellow free agent Jimmy Butler have expressed mutual interest in playing with one another many times over the years and the Nets now have the cap room to sign both of them outright.

We could see a scenario here where Kyrie signs a one-year deal with the Nets, to leave his options open for next summer (a jump to the Knicks to join Durant?). Kyrie recently signed with Roc Nation, which orchestrated all of those year-to-year deals Durant had with Golden State.

Meanwhile, expect Russell to land with the Suns or possibly even return to the Lakers in restricted free agency.

Projection: Nets sign Kyrie Irving and Jimmy Butler.

Kemba Walker and Kyrie Irving could both have new homes by this time next week. GETTY IMAGES

Aries Not everything will go according to plan, but as long as you are adaptable and roll with the punches, you will come out on top. A physical change will boost your confidence.

Taurus Bring your ideas out into the open and promote what you want to happen. A lifestyle change will lead to a healthy and happy future. Minimize stress and enjoy life.

Gemini Take the initiative and make arrangements to socialize with friends. Expressing your feelings will lead to a response that may not be expected, but will be valuable.

Cancer Whatever you do, give it your own unique touch. Trust in your vision and insight, and show confidence when discussing your plans. A partnership needs a tune-up.

Leo Look for alternative sources of information if you are confused. Ask questions and consider if someone is trying to mislead or take advantage of you. Put your energy into personal growth, not into pleasing others.

Virgo Preparation will help you fulfill the promises you have made. If you keep the momentum flowing, success will be yours. Your confident attitude will persuade others to pitch in and help.

Libra Don't avoid the inevitable. The sooner you deal with problems or people who are causing you grief, the easier it will be to get on with your life.

Scorpio Do more research before you make a promise or commit to a project. Money can be made if everything has been set up correctly. Don't leave anything to chance.

Sagittarius You will leave an impression on someone. What you do or say will be honored or scorned, depending on how accurate you are and how willing you are to stand behind your words.

Capricorn Take care of personal matters and make overdue changes. Refuse to let your emotions sway your opinion or lead you in a direction that you know isn't right for you.

Aquarius Don't let anything or anyone slow you down or stand in your way. You have remarkable ideas that, once implemented, will make your life better. Love is in the air.

Pisces Consider the way you would like to live and start making changes that will satisfy your needs. Someone you have helped in the past will return the favor. EUGENIA LAST
